SINGLE MARKET VENTURES

An outline

How to use the Europe-link help-line to get answers to your organisation's individual questions in the area of EU product approvals.

In addition to an annual face-to-face briefing at a time of mutual agreement, your subscription includes up to eight hours of individual research at more or less any time, at no extra charge to you. Many enquiries may take only a few minutes to answer through our own databases. Here are some guidelines on how to get the most out of the service.

1. When can you send enquiries?

At any time after your subscription payment is registered by us.

2. What subjects are covered?

On the following page you will find lists of the main subjects covered at no extra charge in this service, and the main ones excluded. Note, however, that even where a subject is excluded from the Europe-link service itself, we may still have the capability to serve your needs outside the service or be able to commission work on your behalf.

3. How should enquiries be sent, and how are they answered?

Enquiries may be sent to us by e-mail or telephone. Our replies will normally be sent by e-mail. Although we offer no guaranteed maximum time-limit for our replies, we try to respond to any urgency indicated to us.

There is no specific format recommended for your questions, but we do ask for as much detail as possible on your need, so that we can give the best possible reply. For example, if you are enquiring about a specific EU regulation, provide any references which you know. The clearer your questions are, the more efficient our replies will be.

4. How do you know how much "free" time is left?

If you reach the end of your free-of-charge entitlement, we will notify you. Even after this, however, we are still likely to be able to serve your needs. Subject to our capacity, we will try to help you with service on a chargeable basis. No additional charges will be made to you, beyond your base subscription, without your agreement in advance. When you "run out" of free time and state that you wish to continue sending us enquiries, we will propose to you a detailed basis for charging.

5. What happens if you send us confidential data?

Unlike our other reports, our "Help-Line" reports to you are considered confidential to the individual subscriber who submits the question. Any information which we receive from you or obtain for you, and which concerns an issue which you might reasonably regard as confidential, will not be communicated to others without your permission.

An outline

6. What subjects are covered by the Europe-link help-line?

Subjects included (with the limited sectoral exclusions below):

- Clarification of our reports (for example, a question of detail on our interpretation of an EU Directive).
- Questions on whether an EU-level regulation of specifications, testing, certification or product approval exists or is being drafted in any specific product area.
- Questions on the policy framework underlying EU-level regulations or programmes in any specific area, such as other applicable regulations or the history of regulation in that area.
- Questions on the content of an EU product harmonisation regulation, and its general interpretation, even where you can find no reference to it in our reports..
- Where texts of relevant sections of EU regulations can be found. Where texts are available free-of-charge on Internet, the Internet link or the actual text will be provided. If Google hasn't worked for you, we may be able to help: for an example, by ensuring that you are given the link to the most recent or currently applicable text. Surprisingly or not, our data-bases are sometimes more up-to-date than official EU Internet portals, for example on standards recognised under individual regulations.
- Generic problems your exporters have with EU regulations, which go beyond the basic technical analysis and compliance action required of any supplier. This does not include professional legal advice on such problems, or the preparation of compliance documentation.
- European-level voluntary certification issues.

Subjects excluded from the Help-line service (note that we will sometimes be able to advise where to go to get this data, even though legal or copyright reasons may prevent us giving it to you direct):

- Questions unrelated to technical harmonisation (for example, a question on customs tariffs, quotas, or rules of origin).
- Questions specific to phyto-sanitary or pharmaceuticals sector regulations.
- Drafting of compliance documentation for individual products, and detailed technical research in that connection. We are not equipped to examine the technical detail of individual standards or specifications, and do not draft declarations of conformity, technical files, or other documentation of this kind.
- Obtaining, from official EU bodies, texts which are defined as confidential by the EU.
- Listings of unpublished or oral sources of information. Some of our sources prefer confidentiality or anonymity, and do not wish to receive random enquiries from unknown contacts. We respect that wish.
- Lobbying, or advocacy of your positions to the EU authorities or any other third party.
- Questions on national-level regulations or voluntary procedures in EU member states. Our service concentrates on procedures which are set once only, at the EU level.
- Texts of national or European standards or other standards recognised under EU regulations, where these are protected by copyright and must be purchased from a standards body..
- Any individual research project requiring more than one half-day of special research (the Help-line is intended for short, practical research).
- Formal legal advice on legal disputes or on the rights or obligations you or your clients may have in EU law. Although we will gladly advise on the usefulness of legal action, we do not offer legally binding advice.
